A dedicated COVID-19 inpatient psychiatric unit is beneficial for asymptomatic or mildly symptomatic patients who are experiencing psychiatric decompensation or at high risk of harm to themselves or others.

The increased medical supervision in a COVID-19 inpatient psychiatric unit may be of particular benefit to the geriatric population since the disease course of COVID-19 can cause patients to rapidly decompensate.